CD32: accompaniment

Alligator Alarm

All across the Alli Swamp the animals were afoot, sneaking about on their tippy toes, whispering to their friends, because Alligator Al was fast asleep. Every afternoon, right after he'd been fed, Alligator Al lay across his bed. A really big alarm clock was set by his head.

The alarm clock was so big that all the animals could see it was set to wake him at three. So all around the area the animals agreed, when Alligator Al slept they could move about him - free.

His snoring was so loud it echoed all around and as the animals crept on by, they didn't make a sound. One by one they tiptoed on. The time was quickly passing by; then all eyes turned to Old Be-bop Bear who as usual was last. He was slowly shuffling by just as the alarm clock moved onto three - then Rrrrrring!
