PROGRAM NOTES

John Philip Sousa (1854–1932) was a busy man, filling his life with wide-ranging and exhausting activities—so many concerts, so much traveling, and all the business that goes with that complicated aspect of moving a large ensemble; so much pleasant dining, hunting, riding, so many marches! In the midst of all of this activity, it is not too surprising to discover that Sousa failed to leave behind even the most basic information concerning the composition of many of his most famous creations. His rambling and reflective autobiography, Marching Along, published in 1928, includes no reference to most of them. There is, of course, no official documentation of the majority of his manuscripts at this writing, and thus, save for those marches to which he made specific references in his autobiography or for which a dedication was printed on the solo cornet part, all comment is but the purest conjecture.

By the time Sousa had reached the fiftieth year of his career as a conductor, he had conducted in all of the great and humble places of the world; for both the great and humble people he met he often left the token of his highest esteem, a march with their name on it. Golden Jubilee, written in 1928, was, however, his own salute to himself—observing fifty years of conducting that began in the theater pits of Philadelphia and took him around the world and into the hearts of all who ever saw him lead his famous band. Composers do not usually write pieces for themselves, but then John Philip Sousa was not the usual composer.

The original edition of Golden Jubilee is scrupulously preserved in this handsome new issue. All I have endeavored to do in my editing is to clarify ambiguous nuances, dynamics, and inconsistent articulations or phrasings, which probably arose in the original march-size format simply because of the cramped character of that miniature page. The visual problem is hereby eliminated, as are the treble clef mid-range brass and E♭ alto parts, obsolete as doublings; the piccolo in D♭ has been transposed to C. The percussion parts have been separated by instruments and their articulations clarified.

It is recommended that both the characteristically loose-slung field drum be used together with the conventional snare drum and that the bass drum tension be slack, its heads undamped, and the instrument be played with a hard beater. Cymbals should ring freely as indicated in the part and be damped only as directed.
